HISTORY AND MISSION

California's Fair Political Practices Commission was established by voters in response to the Watergate scandal through the passage of Proposition 9 of 1974. The ballot measure, which later became known as the Political Reform Act, sets standards for campaign finance, financial conflicts of interest, lobbyists registration and reporting, post-governmental employment, political mass mailings, gifts and honoraria, and more. The Commission has five members, the current Commission Chair is Adam E. Silver.
